Race for Arizona's 6th Congressional District Shows Engel Leading by Two Points

Poll Shows Engel Edging Out Juan Ciscomani in Top House Race

TUCSON, AZ — A new poll, released by the Engel campaign today, shows Democratic congressional nominee for Arizona's 6th District Kirsten Engel up by two points, 49-47.

Despite being backed by millions in corporate spending during the primary, Ciscomani is particularly vulnerable in a head-to-head contest with Engel, especially as voters find him out of touch and too extreme for the district. Moreover, a majority of AZ-06 voters support abortion access, and Ciscomani boasts of a lengthy anti-abortion record, including supporting a federal abortion ban and celebrating the Supreme Court's decision to overturn Roe v. Wade as "historic."

"This poll shows what we've known all along: That Arizonans are eager to support a leader like Kirsten Engel who will protect women's health care and rights, lower the cost of living, and fight for clean air and water," said campaign manager Robijn van Giesen. "Juan Ciscomani's extremist agenda is hurting him with voters who are watching as Republicans launch attack after attack on our rights and democracy. The momentum is with Kirsten and we're going to work hard from now until November to make sure every voter hears her message."

Kirsten Engel dominated a contested Democratic primary with 60 percent of the vote share, introducing herself to voters as a mother, a teacher, an environmental lawyer and an expert on water.

This race is highly competitive, and Engel can maintain her lead and win this must-hold seat in November.
